lewis and clark hired charbonneau as a guide and asked him to bring sacagawea as an interpreter. sacagawea joined the expedition to cross the rocky mountains, even though she was pregnant. Before the start of the journey, Sacagawea gave birth to a son named jean baptiste. clark called him "little pomp" or "pompey." He was the youngest member of the corps of discovery.

The expedition left the Mandan village on april 7, 1805. Thirty-three people, including sacagawea and her baby, traveled in pirogues and rowboats. As the expedition approached the rockies, sacagawea recognized her home. They soon met members of the shoshone tribe, and the chief cameahwait welcomed them as his guests. sacagawea recognized cameahwait as her brother and was finally reunited with her family.
