11. Answers will vary but should indicate that Alice is a young and curious girl who still has an active imagination. Details that justify this analysis could include the following: Alice complains that the book that her sister is reading has no pictures in it, and picture books are often associated with young children. She instantly chases the White Rabbit, and even jumps into a hole to satisfy her curiosity. Alice accepts the weirdness around her. She decides that it is safe to drink from the bottle simply because it is not labeled as being poison. The school subjects she references (grammar, multiplication, and geography) are typical elementary school subjects. Alice also cries often.
  12. Answers will vary but should compare the two characters. For example: Both the White Rabbit and the Mouse are animals that retain some of their natural animal behaviors. They look like animals, and the rabbit scurries while the Mouse fears cats. However, both the White Rabbit and the Mouse can also speak and behave in ways that are neither natural nor realistic. On the basis of these details, students will make a prediction about how other characters behave; for example, other animals might also have that strange blend of natural and impossible.
