

Battling for Independence

A Reading A-Z Level Z2 Leveled Book
Word Count: 2,090

Connections

Writing

Imagine you are Thomas Jefferson and you have been asked to write the Declaration of Independence. Write a modern-day version and read it to your class.

Social Studies

Choose one major battle of the Revolutionary War. Write a research report summarizing the battle and how a different outcome of the battle could have impacted the war.

Reading A-Z

Visit www.readinga-z.com for thousands of books and materials.

www.readinga-z.com

Battling for Independence

Part Two of The American Revolution
Written by Terry Miller Shannon

www.readinga-z.com

Focus Question

How did the battles of the Revolutionary War lead to the creation of the United States of America?

Words to Know

abandoned	momentum
amends	morale
casualty	Patriots
commission	petition
conflict	retaliated
delegates	self-governing
independence	siege
Loyalists	treaty
mercenaries	unity

Photo Credits:

Front cover: courtesy of Library of Congress, P&P Division [LC-USZCN4-159]; title page, pages 5, 12: © Bettmann/Corbis; pages 6, 22: © North Wind Picture Archives/Alamy; page 7: © The National Archives/HIP/The Image Works; page 13: The Declaration Committee, published by Currier & Ives, New York (colour litho), American School, (19th century)/Private Collection/Peter Newark American Pictures/The Bridgeman Art Library; page 14: © Richard Levine/Alamy; page 15: © Jupiterimages Corporation; page 17: courtesy of Library of Congress, P&P Division [LC-USZC4-4969]; page 19: © North Wind Picture Archives/AP Images; page 21 (top): © SuperStock/SuperStock; page 21 (bottom): © Lebrecht Music and Arts Photo Library/Alamy

Part Two of The American Revolution

Battling for Independence tells about the major battles of the Revolutionary War. Read Seeds of Revolution to find out what events lead to the war. Then read Building a Nation to find out what happens after the war is over.

Battling for Independence
Level Z2 Leveled Book
© Learning A-Z
Written by Terry Miller Shannon

All rights reserved.

www.readinga-z.com

Correlation

LEVEL Z2

Fountas & Pinnell	Y-Z
Reading Recovery	N/A
DRA	70+

Introduction

America was not always a country. More than 200 years ago, it was a collection of thirteen colonies ruled by Great Britain and its English king, George III. Britain began taxing the colonists and enforcing unpopular new laws, and the colonists objected, saying they wanted “no taxation without representation” in British Parliament. It seemed that Parliament was refusing to honor the 1689 Bill of Rights, which applied to all citizens of the British realm—including the colonists.

Over time, the disagreements between the two groups only increased the negative feelings and violence. King George III tried to gain control over the colonists by using harsher taxation and threats of military force. A series of events, including the Boston Tea Party, led to a confrontation on April 19, 1775, between British soldiers and colonists at the towns of Lexington and Concord in Massachusetts. Shots were exchanged on the village green in Lexington—no one knows which side fired first. Thanks to a poem titled “Concord Hymn” by Ralph Waldo Emerson, that first shot became known as “the shot heard ‘round the world,” signaling the beginning of war between Britain and the thirteen colonies.

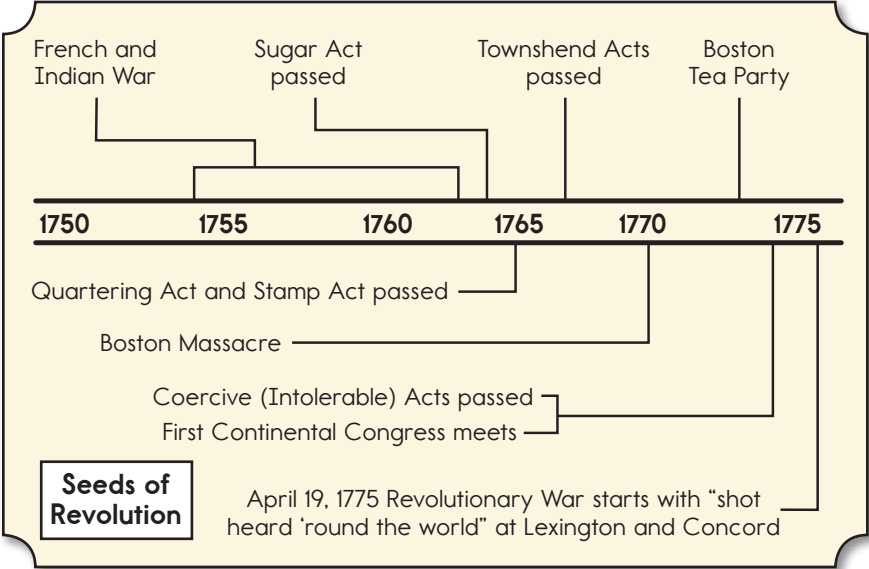

Table of Contents

Introduction 4

The Second Continental Congress 5

The Patriots Take Ticonderoga 8

Bunker Hill (and Breed’s Hill) 9

Declaring Independence 13

Battling for Freedom 14

Southern Battles 18

Major Players in the Revolutionary War 21

Glossary 23

Index 24

Give Me Liberty!

When King George refused to repeal the taxes, it became obvious that the colonies would have to fight for their independence. After the First Continental Congress, Patrick Henry returned to Virginia and made a speech in which he cried, "Give me liberty or give me death!" During the war, "Liberty or Death!" was a Patriot battle cry.

The Second Continental Congress

On May 10, 1775, the Second Continental Congress met at Independence Hall in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The fifty-six delegates unanimously chose George Washington, one of the delegates from Virginia and a former officer in the British army, to command the colony's troops, which until then had been called the New England militia. The Congress voted to call the troops the Continental Army to foster a feeling of unity among the colonies, and declared it would be made up of volunteer soldiers from each of the thirteen colonies.

Thinking Critically

WHAT does a unanimous vote reveal about the delegates' perception of George Washington?

IN YOUR MIND, how might a unanimous vote benefit the delegates?

Washington's job as commander of the Continental Army wasn't going to be easy. Washington had a ragtag group of farmers, carpenters, and blacksmiths with few weapons and little or no training, and his orders were to capture or destroy all armed enemies. These soldiers would be fighting against the powerful, well-trained, and well-supplied military might of Britain. He expected to fail, telling Patrick Henry—a lawyer from Virginia—"From the day I enter upon the command of the American armies, I date my fall, and the ruin of my reputation."

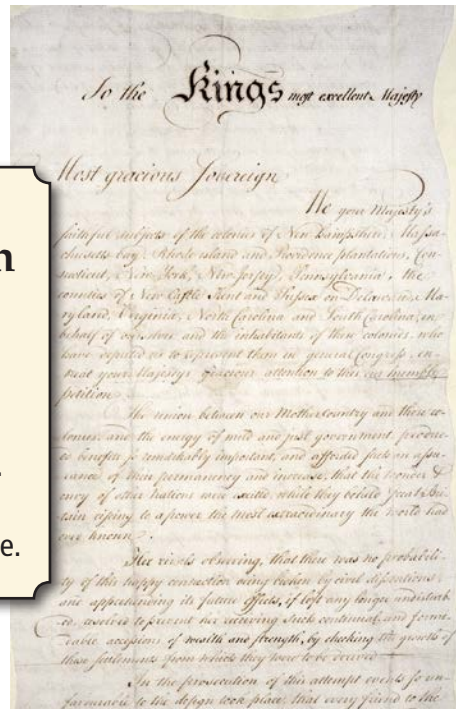

George Washington accepts the surrender of troops in Trenton, New Jersey, 1776.

Although he thought his reputation would be ruined, Washington believed so strongly in the cause of American independence, he took the challenge as its commander and insisted that he not be paid for his services.

The Olive Branch Petition

The petition that the Second Continental Congress sent to King George III was called the Olive Branch Petition. An olive branch is a symbolic offering of peace.

Not every colonist wanted to be independent from Britain. So while George Washington headed to Concord and Lexington near Boston to lead his new troops, the Continental Congress continued to try to make amends with Britain's Parliament. The delegates sent a petition to King George III asking him again to grant the colonists rights and to proclaim the colonists loyal English subjects. King George refused to receive the petition and declared that the colonists "had proceeded to open and avowed rebellion." In short, the king declared those colonists who wanted independence as traitors to the crown.

The Patriots Take Ticonderoga

While the Second Continental Congress met in Philadelphia, the Colonist soldiers scored a victory over the British at Fort Ticonderoga in New York. A rough, tough farmer from Connecticut named Ethan Allen and his backwoods friends had formed a group called the Green Mountain Boys. The Congress requested that the Green Mountain Boys capture the British fort on Lake Champlain. Another soldier named Benedict Arnold also was ordered to attack Fort Ticonderoga. Arnold had an official commission from Connecticut to take the fort from the British. Both Arnold and Allen desired to lead the attack, so they argued all the way to Ticonderoga, but they managed to conquer the fort together on May 10, 1775.

The next day, another British fort, at Crown Point, was captured by Allen and Arnold. The victories gave the Patriots a morale boost and gave the colonists a northern border that was secure from the British. They also served as an announcement that war had indeed begun. Colonists were now forced to take sides either as Loyalists, those who wanted to remain part of Britain, or as Patriots, those who wanted independence from Britain. There was no middle ground.

Bunker Hill (and Breed's Hill)

Following the Battle of Lexington, in which “the shot heard ‘round the world” started the first battle of the American Revolution, the British soldiers, led by Major John Pitcairn, had retreated to Boston. The colonist soldiers camped outside Boston, gathering forces. About 16,000 Patriot troops eventually surrounded Boston, cutting off the British supply line into Boston. With Patriot troops surrounding Boston, British General Thomas Gage worried enemy troops might fortify the hills across the Charles River from Boston—Bunker Hill and Breed's Hill in Charlestown.

On the night of June 16, 1775, General Artemis Ward ordered his Patriot soldiers to dig trenches into Bunker Hill. The soldiers misunderstood their orders and instead went to Breed's Hill, which was closer to the British position. By morning, soldiers and trenches blanketed the hill. The British soldiers, under General William Howe, moved by ship across the Charles River with cannons blasting. The minutemen were at a disadvantage: they weren't well trained and were fighting Britain's professional soldiers. The Patriots also had very little gunpowder. In order to conserve their ammunition, Patriot officers told their soldiers to make every shot count by waiting until the British were very near before firing: “Wait until you see the whites of their eyes.”

The strategy worked, and as the British soldiers rushed the hill, the Americans held their fire until the last safe moment. Many British soldiers died in the attack. More British troops landed and attacked, with the Americans continuing to wait and then shoot. Finally, after the third wave of attacks, when the Americans ran out of gunpowder and had to retreat, the British captured Breed's Hill and Bunker Hill.

The British won control of the two hills at the cost of many British lives. More than 1,000 British soldiers were wounded or killed, while the Patriots lost 441 men. The Patriots gained a boost in morale even though they lost a battle because they could fight and win a conflict against a greater number of professional soldiers. Although most of the action was seen on Breed's Hill, the battle has come to be known as "The Battle of Bunker Hill."

General George Washington arrived in July 1775, and his troops besieged the British in Boston for nearly a year. He also sent forces to invade Canada to prevent the British from landing there and sending forces south into New York. The Patriots, led by General Richard Montgomery, were able to capture Montreal in November 1775. Benedict Arnold led an attack on the city of Quebec, but because of the severe December weather, it failed.

During the winter, Patriots used cannons they captured from the British to attack British soldiers in Boston. On March 17, 1776, the British soldiers and thousands of Loyalists abandoned Boston, leaving Washington's troops to march triumphantly into the city.

Thinking Critically

HOW would seeing the Patriots using British cannons cause the British troops to react?

"Put your John Hancock right here."

The above saying dates back to 1776 when John Hancock boldly signed the Declaration of Independence. His large signature encouraged the other 53 signers to sign.

Declaring Independence

Patriot Thomas Paine wrote a pamphlet, Common Sense, in which he declared independence to be the only correct choice for the colonists. Paine challenged the authority of the British government using plain language that most people could easily understand. Selling 150,000 copies in a few months, Paine swayed many Loyalists to the side of independence.

In June 1776, the Continental Congress selected a committee to write a statement about the colonists' right to be self-governing. Thomas Jefferson, the youngest member of the Congress, was chosen as the actual writer because he was known for his writing skills. The Continental Congress approved the Declaration of Independence on July 4, 1776. Once passed by each of the thirteen colonies, the Declaration of Independence created the United States of America. The colonies were no longer colonies—they were called states.

Battling for Freedom

There were gloomy days ahead for the Patriots, as they lost battle after battle. A month after the Declaration of Independence was signed, the British, under General William Howe, shipped 30,000 soldiers into New York Harbor. The Battle of Long Island lasted for three days until the outnumbered Patriots finally retreated south across New Jersey to Philadelphia. The British occupied New York City and won a battle in which Patriots surrendered Fort Washington. More than 2,000 Patriot soldiers died or were captured in those three days.

A statue honors Nathan Hale's sacrifice.

A Spy's End

Nathan Hale, a 21-year-old teacher, volunteered to spy on British troops in New York City. Hale was caught and hanged. His last words were: "I regret that I have but one life to give for my country."

In October 1776, Patriot Benedict Arnold's gunboats were defeated at Lake Champlain in Canada. However, the Patriots fought so fiercely that the British were concerned. Conquering the rebels might not be as easy as they'd thought. On December 24, 1776, George Washington and his men ferried across the Delaware River to Trenton, New Jersey, in a surprise attack against the Hessian mercenaries, who were from Germany and were allied with the British. In one night, the Patriots moved 2,400 men across the icy river in sleet and snow. The Patriots won a battle there in less than an hour! It was the first major victory of the war. A few days later, Washington defeated the British at Princeton, New Jersey. These victories rejuvenated the Patriots' morale.

Benedict Arnold's Plot

Benedict Arnold was a brave general, but he felt Congress and the Continental Army had mistreated him. In 1779, Washington put Arnold in charge of a fort on the lower Hudson River called West Point. Arnold planned to sell the fort to the British. When his plan was revealed, he became a traitor and joined the British army.

Britain retaliated in June 1777 by moving a large army led by General John Burgoyne south from Canada. Burgoyne planned to conquer the Hudson River area at Albany, New York, cutting off New England and New York from the other colonies. On the way, Burgoyne recaptured Fort Ticonderoga. However, Patriot soldiers stopped Burgoyne's momentum at the Battle of Saratoga in October, with Burgoyne surrendering approximately 6,000 men.

The Battle of Saratoga was a major turning point in the war because it proved to France and other European countries that the Patriots might win the war. In 1778, France joined the fight against its long-standing enemy Great Britain by sending supplies to the Continental Army. Soon afterward, Spain and the Netherlands also declared war on Britain.

Supplies grew scarcer for the Continental Army. Soldiers often lacked food, clothing, and shelter. The Continental Congress needed allies such as France to help supply the troops. George Washington's troops suffered through a frigid and hungry winter at Valley Forge, Pennsylvania, before supplies reached them.

In June 1778, after that horrible winter, Washington attacked the British army, now under the command of General Henry Clinton, at the Battle of Monmouth. Neither side won the fight, which was the last major battle in the northern colonies, but it did demonstrate that the Patriots could fight on equal footing with Britain's soldiers.

A depiction of the legend of Molly Pitcher, a woman who took her husband's place after he died in battle

Southern Battles

British forces captured Savannah, Georgia, in December 1778. Then they attacked and captured Charleston, South Carolina, in May 1780. They won yet again at Camden, South Carolina, in August 1780. These three battles had the highest casualty rates of the war. Many colonists in the southern colonies were Loyalists. Although Britain was winning the South, the Patriots would not give up.

The tide of the war started to turn in favor of the Patriots in October when they won a battle at King's Mountain, South Carolina, in a speedy sixty-five minutes. This battle was one of the few in the war that did not involve British soldiers—it was fought by Patriots against Loyalists. In January and April 1781, the Patriots again won battles at Cowpens and Camden, respectively. Next, they forced British General Charles Cornwallis north into Virginia. Cornwallis had aided the British victory at Long Island in 1776 and had taken command of British troops in the South in 1780. The Patriots' alliance with the French began to pay off. French soldiers helped hold back the British and fought alongside colonists as part of the troops Washington led into Virginia.

Cornwallis surrenders to Washington at Yorktown.

The most important battle of the war was about to begin. A fleet of twenty-four French ships drove off nineteen British ships sent to rescue Cornwallis and his troops at Yorktown, on the coast of Virginia. The French fleet also brought extra soldiers to help the fight on land. The French and Patriot troops moved into Yorktown, laying siege to the British army for three weeks before they surrendered on October 19, 1781, thus ending the Revolutionary War.

The Patriots had won their war and were now independent from Britain. The United States of America officially became independent from Great Britain with the Peace of Paris in 1783. The treaty granted to the United States all land in North America west to the Mississippi River with the exceptions of Canada (retained by Great Britain) and Florida (retained by Spain). Now a group of colonies that was accustomed to being supported by another country had to come together and build a brand new nation.

Thinking Critically

WHAT do you consider to be the greatest challenge faced by people of any new nation?

IN YOUR MIND, why might one challenge be greater than others?

Major Players in the Revolutionary War

George Washington:

Commander of the Continental Army; later became the country's first president

George Washington

Thomas Gage: Commander of British troops in the colonies; army was trapped in Boston after battles at Lexington and Concord

John Burgoyne: British commander of the northern army; captured Fort Ticonderoga but was defeated at Saratoga

King George III: Twenty-two years old when he became Great Britain's king; was determined to keep the colonies at all costs

King George III

Thomas Jefferson: Wrote the Declaration of Independence

Thomas Paine: Wrote a booklet called Common Sense, which inspired many colonists to choose independence

William Howe: Commander of the British army in North America, 1775–1778

Henry Clinton: Replaced Howe as British commander in 1778

Charles Cornwallis: British general under Henry Clinton; was in charge of the South; surrendered at Yorktown on October 19, 1781

Charles Cornwallis

Marquis de Lafayette: A young Frenchman who served as a commander under Washington; instrumental in attaining the French military assistance that helped win the war

Glossary

abandoned (v.)	left behind (p. 12)
amends (n.)	acts that are intended to make up for causing a bad situation or loss (p. 7)
casualty (n.)	a person injured, killed, or missing during a war, accident, or disaster (p. 18)
commission (n.)	an authorized command requiring someone, usually in the military, to perform a duty (p. 8)
conflict (n.)	a disagreement of ideas, principles, or opinions between people or groups; a fight, battle, or war (p. 11)
delegates (n.)	chosen or elected people who represent and act on behalf of others (p. 5)
independence (n.)	freedom from the control, influence, support or help of others (p. 5)
Loyalists (n.)	citizens of the thirteen colonies who remained loyal to Great Britain during the American Revolution (p. 8)
mercenaries (n.)	soldiers who fight for any army that will pay them (p. 15)
momentum (n.)	the strength or force that keeps something moving or increasing over time (p. 16)
morale (n.)	the level of confidence or enthusiasm of an individual or a group when working on a project or toward a goal (p. 8)
Patriots (n.)	people who supported the independence of the thirteen colonies during the American Revolution (p. 8)
petition (n.)	a formal written request, usually accompanied by the signatures of a large number of citizens (p. 7)

retaliated (v.)	attacked in response to having been attacked (p. 16)
self-governing (adj.)	having the right to create and enforce laws without outside interference (p. 13)
siege (n.)	the act of surrounding and often attacking an enemy for a long time while preventing them from getting food and other supplies (p. 12)
treaty (n.)	a formal agreement of peace or friendship between two nations or groups (p. 20)
unity (n.)	the quality of people or things being joined in a single group, purpose, or identity (p. 5)

Index

Allen, Ethan, 8	George III (King), 4, 7, 21
Arnold, Benedict, 8, 12, 15	Green Mountain Boys, 8
Breed's Hill (Bunker Hill), 9–11	Hale, Nathan, 14
Burgoyne, John, 16, 21	Hancock, John, 13
Camden, Battle of, 18, 19, 22	Jefferson, Thomas, 13, 21
Clinton, Henry, 17, 21, 22	King's Mountain, Battle of, 18, 19, 22
Common Sense , 13, 21	Long Island, Battle of, 14, 19, 22
Continental Congress, 5, 7, 8, 13, 17	Loyalists, 8, 12, 13, 18, 19
Cornwallis, Charles, 18–20, 22	Monmouth, Battle of, 17
Declaration of Independence, 13, 14, 21	Paine, Thomas, 13, 21
de Lafayette, Marquis, 22	Saratoga, Battle of, 16, 17, 21
Fort Ticonderoga, 8, 16, 21, 22	Trenton, Battle of, 6, 15
Fort Washington, 14	Valley Forge, 17, 22
Gage, Thomas, 9, 21	Washington, George, 5–7, 12, 15, 17, 19, 21, 22