Before Reading

Build Background

- Ask students what they think it means to be treated fairly. Encourage them to give examples of fairness at home or at school. Ask who they depend on to make sure they are treated fairly at home or at school.
- Group students by hair or eye color and, as an example, explain to students in one group (for example, blond-haired people) that there is a new (imaginary) rule at school, and they will always have to stand at the back of the line for recess, or they may not play on the same playground as everyone else. Lead a discussion with students about their reaction to this “new” school rule.

- Explain that these conditions really did exist in the United States not long ago, and that Martin Luther King Jr. worked very hard to make sure that people of all colors would have equal rights and have equal access to the same things.
- Show students a map of the United States. Point out the Southern region and the states of Georgia and Alabama, where Martin Luther King Jr. lived and worked.

Preview the Book

Introduce the Book

- Give students their copy of the book. Guide them to the front and back covers and read the title. Have students discuss what they see on the covers. Encourage them to offer ideas as to what type of book it is (genre, text type, fiction or nonfiction, and so on) and what it might be about.
- Show students the title page. Discuss the information on the page (title of book, author's name)
- Preview the table of contents on page 3. Remind students that the table of contents provides an overview of the book. Ask students what they expect to read about in the book, based on what they see in the table of contents. (Accept all answers that students can justify.)

Introduce the Reading Strategy: Summarize

- Explain to students that one way to understand and remember information in a book is to write a summary, or a brief overview, of the most important information in a section or chapter. Point out that a summary includes the main idea and one or two supporting details. It often answers the questions who, what, when, where, and why.
- Create a chart on the board similar to the summarize worksheet, with the headings Who, What, When, Where, and Why. Read the introduction on page 3 aloud to students and model summarizing.
Think-aloud: To summarize, I need to decide which information is the most important to remember in a section. To do this, I can consider who and what the section was about, what happened, and when and why it happened. Then I can organize that information into a few sentences. This section is quite short, but I can still identify Who: Martin Luther King Jr., a great African American leader. Under the What heading, I will write celebrate Martin Luther King Jr. Day. Under When, I will write each January. It does not mention a place, so I will leave the Where heading blank. Under the Why heading, I can write to remember a man who worked for freedom and equality. When I organize all this information, a summary of this first page might be: In January, we celebrate a great African American leader named Martin Luther King Jr., who worked for freedom for all people.
- As students read, encourage them to use other reading strategies in addition to the targeted strategy presented in this section.

Introduce the Comprehension Skill: Cause and effect

- Discuss cause-and-effect relationships. Explain that a cause is an action or event that makes something happen, and the effect is what happens because of, or as a result of, the action or event.
Think-aloud: I know that there are reasons, or causes, for events to happen. When the temperature outside is very cold and it drops below 32 degrees (0 degrees Celsius), a puddle of water will freeze. The cause is the temperature dropping; the effect is the puddle freezing.
- Explain to students that there can be more than one effect resulting from a cause. Ask students what else can happen when the temperature drops below 32 degrees Fahrenheit.
- Explain to students that they will be looking for cause-and-effect relationships as they read the book.

Introduce the Vocabulary

- Model strategies that students can use to work out words they don't know. For example, they can use what they know about letters and sounds, base words, prefixes, and suffixes. They can also use the context to work out meanings of unfamiliar words.

- Have students find the word segregated on page 5. Ask how they might read this word if they don't already know it. Suggest that they look at syllables, or chunks. Point out the suffix -ed.
- Remind students to look for clues to a word's meaning in the sentence that contains the unfamiliar word, as well as in sentences before and after. Read aloud the last sentence on page 5 and point out the phrase keep blacks apart.
- Explain to students that sometimes they will not find any context clues that define an unfamiliar word. Point out the glossary at the back of the book. Review or explain that a glossary contains a list of words from the book and their definitions. Model how students can use the glossary to locate a word's meaning. Have a volunteer read the definition for segregated in the glossary.
- Have students locate other content vocabulary words in the glossary and text. Read and discuss their definitions as a class.

Set the Purpose

- Have students read to find out more about Martin Luther King Jr.'s life. Remind them to stop after every few pages to identify the most important information to summarize.

During Reading

Student Reading

- Have students read to the end of page 5. Encourage those who finish early to go back and reread.
- Model summarizing important information in the book.
Think-aloud: I want to stop reading at the end of this page to summarize what I've read so far. First, I thought about the information that answered the questions who, what, when, where, and why. Then, in my mind, I organized the important information into a few sentences. In this section, I read that Martin Luther King Jr. grew up in a loving family. Where he lived, in the South, the laws had always been unfair to African Americans. Even after Abraham Lincoln gave slaves their freedom, new laws kept blacks separate from whites.
- Invite students to assist you in filling in this information on the chart. Have them decide which facts go in the various boxes. Point out that sometimes not all of the questions (who, what, when, where, and why) are answered in every section.
- Create a summary with students for this section, based on the information in the chart. (Martin Luther King Jr. grew up where laws had always been unfair to blacks. Even though slavery had ended, laws still kept blacks separate.) Guide students to understand that not all the information from the book will go in the chart—only the most important details.
- Create a two-column cause-and-effect chart on the board. Write Celebrate every January under the Effect heading. Ask students to use the text and think-aloud discussion to identify what caused this to happen (Martin Luther King Jr. was a great leader whom we remember for his work to make the laws fair for all people). Write this information under the Cause heading.
- Introduce and explain the cause-and-effect worksheet. Ask students to write the information from the board on their worksheet. Have them identify and write on their worksheet a cause-and-effect relationship that happened as a result of Southern states passing new laws after the Civil War (black people were kept apart from whites.)
- Check for understanding: Have students read to the end of page 6. When they have finished reading, have them work with a partner to identify the important information (Who: Blacks; What: had to attend separate, poor schools; sit in the back seats of buses; use separate drinking fountains and restrooms; Why: unfair laws robbed blacks of many rights).
- Ask students to assist you in filling in the class chart with the information from page 6. Monitor their responses to check for accuracy and to reinforce that not all columns of the chart will be filled in (for example, there will be nothing listed under When or Where for page 6).

- Have students read to the end of page 7. Ask them to identify what caused some white people to get angry. Add their response to the class chart, and have them copy it onto their worksheets. (Cause: Supreme Court ordered all schools to allow black students; Effect: Some white people got angry).
 - Have students read the remainder of the book. Encourage them to stop after each section to think about who, what, when, where, and why as they read the rest of the story. Remind them to continue thinking about cause-and-effect relationships as they read.
-  Have students make a question mark in their book beside any word they do not understand or cannot pronounce. Encourage them to use the strategies they have learned to read each word and figure out its meaning.

After Reading

- Ask students what words, if any, they marked in their book. Use this opportunity to model how they can read these words using decoding strategies and context clues.

Reflect on the Reading Strategy

- Divide students into pairs. Assign each group one of the following sections from the book: "Starting His Work," "Marches and Battles," or "I Have a Dream." Have each pair discuss the important information in their section. Have them use the information to create an oral summary of the section, making sure to include who, what, when, where, and why. Have one partner share his or her oral summary.
- Independent practice: Distribute the summarize worksheet to students, and have them complete it on their own using the final section of the book, "One Last March." Invite volunteers to read their summaries if time allows.
- Think-aloud: I know that summarizing keeps me actively involved in what I'm reading and helps me remember what I've read. I know that I will remember more about Martin Luther King Jr. because I summarized as I read the book.

Reflect on the Comprehension Skill

- Discussion: Discuss with students the information on their cause-and-effect worksheet. Point out that sometimes one effect leads to another, and so on. Return to the chart on the board and explain how the last effect you recorded (Some white people got angry) caused another effect: a group called the KKK started scaring and hurting black people.
- Independent practice: Have students complete their worksheet by identifying at least one more cause-and-effect relationship from page 9. If time allows, have them share their findings.
- Enduring understanding: In this story, you read about a great man who thought he could solve conflicts in a peaceful way. Now that you know this information, what will you think about the next time you have a conflict with a friend or family member?

Build Skills

Phonics: Identify r-controlled vowels

- Write the word Luther on the board. Have students find the word in the first sentence on page 4.
- Explain to students that, in some words, when the letter r comes after a vowel, it can affect the sound of the vowel. For example, the e in the word Luther is not making its short or long sound, but rather the /er/ sound.
- Create a four-column chart on the board and explain to students that the most common spellings/groupings for words in which the vowel may be affected by the letter r include (write as column headings on the chart):
 - er, ir, ur (as in father, first, church)
 - or, ore (as in born, more, and before)
 - ar (as in Martin).

- Check for understanding: Have students brainstorm to find other examples that belong in each category. Record their responses in the correct columns.
- Independent practice: Assign pages of the story to pairs of students and have them locate additional examples of r-controlled vowel sounds. Have student pairs record their examples under the appropriate spelling patterns on the board.
- Review the chart on the board as a group when students have finished. Emphasize spelling patterns for r-controlled words that students may encounter repeatedly.

Grammar and Mechanics: Pronouns

- Explain or review that a pronoun is a word used in place of a noun. Write examples of pronouns on the board: I, she, he, it, her, him, they, we, and so on. Write the following sentence on the board: Martin did his homework and played sports. Model how to replace the word Martin with a pronoun (He did his homework and played sports.).
- Have students turn to page 8. Write the following sentence on the board: Martin had read about Mohandas Gandhi, the great leader from India. Underline the name Mohandas Gandhi. Invite a volunteer to reread the sentence, replacing the underlined name with the appropriate pronoun (him).
- Discuss the reasons that authors use pronouns in place of nouns (to make the writing flow better; to avoid repeating the words, and so on).
- Check for understanding: Repeat the activity as time allows, replacing proper nouns with pronouns within sentences. Monitor student responses. If students show understanding, reverse the activity by helping them replace pronouns with proper nouns.

Independent practice: Ask students to underline all the proper nouns on page 12. Have them write an appropriate pronoun above each underlined proper noun. Check their answers for accuracy and discuss student answers if time allows.

Word Work: Synonyms

- Review or explain that a word that means the same or almost the same thing as another word is called a synonym. One reason that writers replace words with synonyms is to make a piece of writing more interesting.
- Point out the word busy on page 4 and show students a thesaurus. Look up busy and model how to use a thesaurus. If the word can be more than one part of speech (for example, some words can be either a noun or a verb), make sure to model how part of speech can affect the meaning of a word, and remind students to choose the correct synonyms in the thesaurus, based on part of speech.
- Give students a thesaurus. Ask them to find the word busy, and confirm the synonyms suggested.
-  Check for understanding: Have students read the first paragraph on page 6. Ask them to circle the word angry. Have students use the thesaurus to find a synonym for the word angry that will make the sentence more interesting. Remind them, when using a thesaurus, to choose words that do not change the meaning or verb tense of the sentence (for example, buy vs. bought). Have students write the sentence using the new word at the bottom of the page. Encourage them to share their sentences.
- Independent practice: Introduce, explain, and have students complete the synonyms worksheet. Discuss answers aloud after they are finished.

Build Fluency

Independent Reading

- Allow students to read their book independently. Additionally, partners can take turns reading parts of the book to each other.

Home Connection

- Give students their book to take home to read with parents, caregivers, siblings, or friends. Have students practice summarizing each section of the story with someone at home.

Extend the Reading

Biography Writing Connection

Provide Internet access and other resources for students to research the life of Rosa Parks. Have them compile and present their information in a biographical format, telling when and where she was born, the important events of her life, and how she worked for the civil rights of all people.

Visit Writing A–Z for a lesson and leveled materials on expository writing.

Social Studies Connection

Now that students have background knowledge from the book, read aloud to them an actual transcript of Martin Luther King Jr.'s "I Have a Dream" speech, or have them listen to a recording of it. Lead a roundtable discussion of students' comprehension and reactions to the wording and content of the speech.

Skill Review

Discussion cards covering comprehension skills and strategies not explicitly taught with the book are provided as an extension activity. The following is a list of some ways these cards can be used with students:

- Use as discussion starters for literature circles.
- Have students choose one or more cards and write a response, either as an essay or as a journal entry.
- Distribute before reading the book and have students use one of the questions as a purpose for reading.
- Cut apart and use the cards as game cards with a board game.
- Conduct a class discussion as a review before the book quiz.

Assessment

Monitor students to determine if they can:

- consistently use the strategy of summarizing to comprehend the text during discussion and on a worksheet
- understand and identify cause-and-effect relationships in the text and on a worksheet
- read and categorize r-controlled vowel words from the text and during discussion
- accurately identify and use pronouns in place of proper nouns in a discussion and in the text
- accurately identify and understand the use of synonyms during discussion and on a worksheet
