Did you lose something? he asked.

We're on a treasure hunt. My friend left a clue here for me"
I explained.

I'm sorry, but the custodians clean this whole place every night.
It probably got thrown away.

Sol put a hand on my shoulder, leading me to the next train home.

I was sad about my prize, but I was even sadder that Hee Jung had gone through so much work for nothing. When we got home, I e-mailed her. If you left it at L'Enfant, it got thrown away.

Hee Jung sent back a smiley face. That would be too easy, but you are on the right TRACK! I miss you, but it's nice to be back in SEOUL.

So it's not at L'Enfant? I wondered out loud.

Sol looked up from the couch. It wasn't

Track seems to mean trains, but which trains, if not the Metro I asked.
And why is Seoul all in caps?

Well, there's a huge subway in Seoul. I got lost there about fifteen times Sol said.

Was there a blue line and a green line I asked.

More than one. Sol walked over, sat down beside me, and began searching for a map of the Seoul subway.
